The City of New Westminster Emergency Management Office is reminding residents of the impacts of climate change, and related emergency events such as extreme heat.

As a key meeting place, and area of continued outreach in the City, it would be greatly appreciated if you could place this poster in all common areas, including elevators, garbage and recycling locations, washrooms, and all other regularly frequented spaces. With simple and frequent reminders and support, we can help educate members of our community about staying safe during increasingly persistent climate change events, including extreme heat.

We are also encouraging everyone to create a social communication network. This ensures that during an emergency there are also friends, family and or neighbours available to provide support in the event of an emergency or heat related event. As we saw last summer during the extreme heat event, we all need to have a personal plan in place that we can quickly mobilize. We need to continue to work together to adapt and build resiliency.

The City's Emergency Management Office appreciates your support.
